CONNECTICUT STUDENTS RECEIVE PRESTIGIOUS AWARDS AT NATIONAL HISTORY DAY® CONTEST

Hartford, CT -- Forty-six students in grades 6-12 represented Connecticut at the prestigious 2023 National History Day® Contest at the University of Maryland. Having won statewide competitions, they joined nearly 3,000 students from the U. S. and overseas to compete nationally. It is the first in-person national contest to take place since 2019.
Inspired by the theme of Frontiers in History: People, Places, Ideas, high school, and middle school students wrote papers, created exhibits, produced documentaries, designed websites, and staged performances exploring topics ranging from Katherine Hepburn to American Sign Language to Clifford W. Beers' impact on attitudes towards mental health.

During the week-long competition (June 11 - 15), Connecticut students presented their work to teams of volunteer judges, who reviewed entries, provided valuable feedback, and selected the top finishers. After meeting the judges, students could view other students' projects and participate many activities, including trading buttons with fellow competitors, touring the University of Maryland, and visiting nearby museums. Connecticut's State Coordinator, Rebecca Taber, also organized several activities for Team CT, including a day-long trip into Washington D.C., where students, parents, and teachers met with Connecticut Senators Richard Blumenthal and Chris Murphy and State Representatives Joe Courtney, Rosa DeLauro, Jahana Hayes, Jim Himes, and John Larson.

Several Connecticut students received special honors during the week. Abigail Yang, an eleventh-grade homeschool student from Glastonbury, was one of only 11 students invited to attend a writer's workshop with White House Historical Association staff and have her paper featured in an online showcase. Abigail's teacher, Susan Richman, enthused that Abigail "has been one of my most remarkable and dedicated and involved AP US History students I've ever had over my many years of leading this course online for homeschooling students."
